Mechanical engineering seniors are required to complete a senior project course that exposes them to real-world situations. Projects consist of integrated product and process development problems, system analysis, or design and manufacturing problems. Results of their investigations are documented in written reports, poster displays, and oral presentations.